RUTH BADER GINSBURG

Ruth Bader Ginsburg

Ruth Bader Ginsburg (1921–2020) served as the 107th Supreme Court Justice of the United States. After beginning her career as an activist lawyer fighting gender discrimination, Ginsburg became a respected jurist whose important opinions advancing gender equality and strong dissents on socially controversial rulings inspired her passionate advocacy of equal justice under law and made her an icon of American values.

In 1972, Ginsburg began teaching at Columbia Law School, where she was hired as the school's first female tenured law professor. That year she also co-founded and co-directed the Women's Rights Project at the American Civil Liberties Union and played a key role in numerous equal protection cases.

By 1980, Ginsburg was determined to bring about change from the other side of the bench. In April of that year, she was nominated by President Jimmy Carter to the U.S. Circuit of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

On June 14, 1993, President Bill Clinton nominated Ginsburg to serve as a justice on the Supreme Court of the United States. She received the unanimous support of the Senate Judiciary Committee, was confirmed in the Senate by a vote of 96–3, and was sworn in as the 107th justice in the East Room of the White House on August 10, 1993.

The U.S. Postal Service has honored the country's highest court and those who have served as well-known stamps over the years. A 1950 stamp featuring the Supreme Court Building in Washington, D.C., was part of the 100th anniversary celebration of the nation's capital. Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., who believed that law is an essential force for social and political change and championed civil rights for all citizens, received his philatelic commemoration in 2008.

Depicting an icon

Commemorating Ruth Bader Ginsburg on a stamp held deep meaning for art director and designer Ed Keller. "It was such a honor working on this project," she says, being tasked with depicting "someone who is so revered in the women's movement, legal circles, and as a human being." Wanting to lend the appropriate level of prestige and gravitas to Ginsburg's likeness, Keller signed an award-winning license and

COLLABORATION THAT LEADS TO FREEDOM

THE UNDERGROUND RAILROAD ISSUANCE honors the courage of men and women who resisted slavery in the United States before emancipation in 1865.

The individuals pictured on these stamps — some formerly enslaved, others born free, and some white supporters — took part in an unlikely story of cooperation and trust.

The proposed pane of four unique stamps grew to ten with input from the National Park Service. A larger pane could tell a broader narrative of the cooperative effort that enabled people to escape enslavement. Art director Antonio Alcalá elaborated on this decision: “Most people know Harriet Tubman and Frederick Douglass, but thousands participated in the Underground Railroad. These stamps allow people to see the faces of some of the other heroes.”

The underground network relied on bonds of deep trust among strangers. Alcalá remarked, “Fleeing bondage and helping others flee meant trusting people you might not know and, together, defying the law.”

Alcalá expanded the visual interpretation of the network with the typographic element on the stamps. He selected words that evoked the work of the Underground Railroad and paired certain words together, or above and below one another, to communicate a powerful message. With a variety of colors for the typography, Alcalá represented the diverse group of men and women working toward the same end.

The design for this issuance presented unique challenges to represent this difficult and complex history well. As Alcalá emphasized, however, this issuance not only celebrates all those who participated in the Underground Railroad but also reminds us of “the power of collaboration” required to bring about important change.
